When only a short distance had been covered the Boers sent some shells among the Company, causing the men promptly to increase their already extended order, and in this way the advance continued until within range of rifle fire, when, just as the Company was preparing for dismounted duty, it was ordered to retire, as the fire was becoming too hot. Having withdrawn a little distance they halted and took up a position close to a pompom, but hardly had the men dismounted to ease their horses when the enemy again found the range, and forthwith sent several shells among them, necessitating another change, and it is certainly a marvel that no one was hit. It was now possible to make out the enemy s position on Diamond Hill, over two miles ahead. It appeared to consist of a precipitous range of kopjes running from north to south, and only approachable across an open plateau of undulating veldt. By this time the cow guns had been got into position right along the British front, but though they searched the ridge ahead of them they met with a most vigorous fire from the enemy in return. Under cover of the guns, the Infantry (21st Brigade) commenced their advance in a widely extended order. At this moment the Field Artillery and pompoms came into action, and the din was shortly augmented by the addition of Maxim and rifle fire as the advance was...
