Not illustrated. 1870 Excerpt: . good house to go to for shelter when the day is cold. A fawn is a young deer not a year old. A stag is a male deer, and has branching horns. Here is a picture of a female deer and a fawn. The deer is a timid animal. A small dog can frighten him; and yet one stag will fight with another stag quite bravely. They have been known to fight on the edge of a high cliff, and to try to push each other over. The flesh of deer is called venison. The common deer of America was once found in great numbers throughout our country; and it is still to be met with in the woods far from towns and houses. When chased by hunters, the deer will plunge into a lake or river, if one can be reached, and try to escape by swimming. If they cannot do that, they will seek some high cliff or rock, and there boldly face the hunters and the hounds. Sometimes the deer are shot by the hunters, who lie in wait for them near the salt-springs or deer-licks, which the deer frequent. They are also tracked by hounds, and shot by the hunters, who watch near the paths which the deer are used to take in their runs. v Sometimes the deer are shot in the night-time. A torch of pitch-pine is carried by one of...
