Not illustrated. 1896 Excerpt: .No one likes to surrender place and power, especially when they lead to emoluments. Some lawyers do not like a Chancery suit to end, and resist reforms which will reduce their fees, and render them less indispensable. Chartered companies in some cases resent to the utmost, and are tempted to cause bloodshed, in order that their vested interest may not suffer, and their monopoly not be destroyed by open competition. In like manner in the case of Eehoboam, nothing less than a message from God would have induced him to allow his kingdom to be rent in twain, and the Ten Tribes to be under a sceptre held by another hand. Again still more to the point--what was it which roused to its highest pitch the malignant enmity of the Pharisees and Chief Priests against the Lord of Life, if not the direct forebodings that they were about to be deprived of their traditional privilege through His rising fame? Thus as priests in all ages--notwithstanding how persons may be foolish enough to regard them--are but mortal men of like passions and frailties with the rest, it is not unnatural that they do their best to prevent nine-tenths of their usurped and coveted power being destroyed, and for ever removed. Nor do we wonder that other clergymen of sacerdotal tendencies, envious of the privileges possessed by corrupt Churches, and alive to the powers to be secured, are striving by subtle and persistent endeavours to establish the Eomish...
